

The Last Roti

A little boy named Gopal lived with his mother in a small house. They had very little money. Every day, his mother worked hard in other people's homes just to buy food for them.

One evening, the mother fell sick and felt very weak. Still, she went to the kitchen and cooked a single roti for dinner. She broke the roti into two pieces—one big piece and one small piece.

She gave the big piece to Gopal and kept the small piece for herself.

Gopal looked at her and asked, "Mom, why are you eating the smaller piece? Aren't you hungry?"

His mother smiled softly and said, "No, my child. A mother's hunger fades away the moment she sees her child smile. Eat up."

Gopal finished his food, feeling full and warm. Years later, when Gopal grew up and had a successful life, he finally understood the truth. He realized that his mother had hidden her own hunger every single day just to make sure he was happy and strong. He understood that a mother's love is the only love in the world that gives everything and asks for nothing.